duine, gen.sing. duine, pl. daoine, s.m. Man. 2 Person, body, individual. 3 The oldest man of a village. D. gun mhath gun chron, is mó 'chron na 'mhath, a man that's neither good nor ill is more ill than good—duine gun mhath gun chron, is also applied to a shiftless, thriftless sort of man who is otherwise quite decent; an duine, the good-man of the house; an d. agamsa, my husband—a. is often applied to either men or women, as, an bheil d. a staigh? is anyone in?; is fhàidh d. na daoine, a proper person is better than many men; ro-dh., an excellent man, man of rank; fhadh-dh., wild man, satyr; d. gaoil, a male relative; d. math, good man; duine-nan-clag, the bell-man. Fear de m' dhaoine, one of my men, is a good example of the difference between fear and duine. [The following remarks apply to W. of Ross-shire. Duine means emphatically a married man. An unmarried man of any age is gille. Fear is as colourless, except as to sex, as "individual," "person," or "one," and is generally little more than a peg on which to hang an attribute. Cha robh e 'na dh. aig an am sin, he was not a (married) man at that time; A native would never commit himself so far as to ask "cò e an d. sin? who is that man?" Bean is duine, is husband and wife (lit. wife and husband.) The precedence of the wife is possibly a relic of Pictish custom. The phrase occurs in other parts, for example Perthshire, which was also in Pictland. In Arran [& Argyllshire—AH] "fear agus bean" is the invariable usage. In Gairloch both phrases are used. In Lewis the latter, and more rarely "duine agus bean" are used. "Cà bheil na fir ud?" where are those fellows? used, for example, in reference to two boys, aged respectively two and three.—C.R. in Gael. Soc., xxiv, 363.]

eu. The following remarks about the distinguishing features between the North and South dialects of Scottish Gaelic through the occurrence of eu or ia in various words, are extracted from an article by Rev. C. M. Robertson, in Celtic Review, October, 1906. Most Gaelic Grammars and Dictionaries say that the North and South dialects of Gaelic are distinguishable by their respective uses of eu and ia in certain words, but no detailed list is ever given.

"Dr. MacBain says the crucial distinction between the two main dialects of Gaelic consists in the different way in which the dialects deal with é derived from compensatory lengthening—in the south it is eu, in the north ia. Another characteristic of the words in which this change is found is that their original stems ended in o or a. There are exceptions, drawn in, perhaps, by the influence of analogy.

The vowel that changes to ia in the north is usually written eu, but it occurs also as ea, è, and é. In southern pronunciation it generally has the sound that is called open e, and that resembles, except that it is long, that of e in English let. The close sound é, like that of e in English why or of a in English late, occurs occasionally in words that have ia in the north, but in general is confined to those words in which diphthongisation is not found, as, beum, ceum, treun, beud. In contact with nasals diphthongisation is found as a rule only in those instances in which the vowel is nasalised in the south, e.g. in eun, meur, but not in beum, treun.

Of the words that have ia in the north, the following are found with é in the south—

Ceudna 'ceunna', 'féirseag' (for feursann), geur, reustlaidh (for reuslaidh), sleuchd, in Arran.

Deug, feun, geug, leubh, in Arran & Islay.

Feudail, gleus, reul, in Arran, Islay & Perth.

Peur (a pear), in Arran, Islay & Glenlyon, eud in Arran & East Perth, Seumas in Arran & Glenlyon.

Sgeun ('sgéan') and déabh in Islay, geuban in Islay & Perth.

Céud (first) and céud (hundred) in Mid-Argyll.

Créadhach (oré), in Perth.

In Strathspey and in Sutherlandshire there are fewer instances of é than in Arran. The only words showing the change to ia, that are not known to have è, in place of é, in some district or other, are ceud, ceudna, deug, feudail, feun, geuban, peurtag, reul, reussail, and reusan, and of these, three are borrowed words, while the diphthongisation of at least two others, feudail and reul, is local and exceptional. The association of the change to ia with the open sound è is thus very close. The tendency, apparently, when the vowel happens to be left undiphthongised in the north, is to sound it é, and further, the vowel is apt in such cases to be é also in Arran and Islay, but è in Perth, Strathspey and Sutherland. Beurla, e.g. is béurla in Arran, Islay, North Argyll, part of Skye, North Inverness and West Ross, but béurla in Perth and Sutherland; geug is géug in Arran, Islay, part of Skye and Lewis, but gèug in Perth, Strathspey and Sutherland.

The vowels that are subject to diphthongisation are arranged in the following groups to show the occurrence of the change in the southern dialect, in Arran, Islay and Perthshire, and in the northern dialect in the following districts in order, North Argyll (Apyin and Sunart), Skye (Sleat), North Inverness-shire (the Aird, south and east of Beaul), West Ross-shire, and Lewis. The pronunciation given in MacAlpine's Dictionary is, in general, that of his native island and is that given here under the name Islay. The absence of a word from the list for any particular district does not in all cases imply non-diphthongisation of the vowel in that district; it may mean that there is some other alteration on the word, or that the attempt to ascertain its pronunciation has not been attended with success. Smeuraich, for example, is smeòraich in Sutherland and Lewis. Feusgan, mussel; fà, a calm; and muir-tèachd, a jelly-fish, (II. iii. below), are not in Dr. Henderson's list for the Aird, and were unfamiliar as Aird words to an aged farmer from the district. Cè, cream, is unknown in several districts, uachdar or bàrr being used instead, and smeur, bramble, is unfamiliar in Lewis. Geug, branch, no doubt owes its non-diphthongisation in parts of the northern Hebrides to its disuse during a treeless period and its subsequent adoption from literature. In West Ross-shire, giag was not disused, but was degraded during the treeless period, and now means, in part at least of the district, a stalk of heather, while a branch of a tree is called meur ('miar').

VI. i. Beurla, eud, m' fheudail, càl-feurain (cives), gleus (trim, &c.), spleuc (stare), teuchdadh (parching), leabag, piata, trèan-ri-trèan.

VI. ii. Earlais (arles), reusan (reason).

Group I. contains words that are diphthongised in the South; all have ia (or iao) in Perthshire, all but the last in Islay, and all but the last three in Arran. MacAlpine gives 'a cheud ' or 'a chiad.' The diphthong is ia in the whole of Arran, and in Glenlyon in Perthshire; in East Perthshire and in the North generally in those words, with the exception of brèagh, it is iao, i.e. the second constituent of the diphthong is not a, but the Gaelic ao sound. Ceudna varies; 'ciadna 'N. Argyll, 'ciandna 'N. Inverness, West Ross, Sutherland, 'ciaont 'Lewis, 'ciadainn 'East Perth, Strathspey, 'céunna 'Arran, 'ciaonna 'Skye. MacAlpine gives 'cianna ' and apparently 'ceudna.'

In addition, dreuchd, omitted by MacAlpine, has ia in Arran, and earlais and reusan, Group VI. ii., have ia, the former in Arran and Islay, and, the latter throughout Argyll and in West Perth ('riaoan ' in N. Argyll) Nèaraidh (V. ii.) has ia in Perthshire.

Groups I. and II. i. have the diphthong in N. Argyll, Skye, N. Inverness, W. Ross and Lewis; Group II. ii. in N. Argyll et seq., except Lewis, and Group II. iii. in N. Argyll et seq., except N. Inverness. Group III. falls to be added to the number in Skye and onwards, and Group IV. in N. Inverness and onwards. The words in V. i. ii. and iii. all have ia in N. Inverness, and those in V. ii. in West Ross also. Trèasg in N. Argyll, and sleuchd in Skye have ia. Nèarachd is 'niarachd ' in N. Argyll, 'niarachd ' in Skye, and 'meurachd ' according to MacAlpine (sub nèarachd) in Argyll.

The words of VI. i. have ia as follows:—Eud (and eudinhor, 'iadar ') càl-feurain, spleuc, and leabag in N. Argyll.

Spleuc, teuchdadh, leabag and trèan-ri-trèan ('trianaidh-trian ') in Skye.

Beurla ('biaorla ' or 'biaolla ') so also Lochbroom, eud ('iad ' in Barra also) 'm' fheudail, gleus, and teuchdaidh in Lewis.

'Piata ' a puny child, N. Inverness and W. Ross, has been explained by Dr. Henderson as a by-form of peata, English 'pet'; in Lewis 'piatan ' is used affectionately of one craving for a drink.

Eud in the North generally means zeal, while jealousy is 'iadach ' (in Glenlyon 'eudach ').

Diphthongisation of the vowel e thus appears to be most prevalent in the central Highlands, and somewhat less so in N. Argyll and Lewis. It has extended strongly into Rannoch which breaks away from the rest of Perthshire in this respect, and is sharply distinguished from Glenlyon and the parish of Blair-Atholl, bounding it respectively on the south and east, and is in full force in Badenoch and Stratdearn, its eastern limits. On the other hand, Strathspey, which means in local usage the part of the valley of the Spey below Bothiemurchus, and lies in an angle between Badenoch on the south-west, and Stratdearn on the north-west, differs from both districts, and agrees closely with the South. Far north Sutherlandshire also, with the exception perhaps of the Assynt quarter of the county, claims to stand with Strathspey and the south in this matter. The words in which ia has been found in Strathspey are:—

Ceud, ceud, ceudna, Di-ceudain, deug sgrèuch, brèagh, sè, ceutach, seun.

With the exception of the two last, those words are diphthongised in Sutherlandshire—Creich, Kildonan, and Strathy—and with the following list, they exhaust the known instances of that vowel change in the southeast and in the north of that county :—

Deuchainn, feuch, feusgan, cia meud, reul, crè.

Beul, neul, sgeul, 'cial.'

Ceutach and feusgan have the diphthong in Creich, deuchainn and feuch in Creich and Kildonan, reul ('rialt' or more frequently 'rialtag') in Kildonan, and crè ('crioadhach') in Kildonan and Strathly. Ceutach and ceutadh apparently are diphthongised by some speakers and not by others ('ceutach' and ceutu') in the Strathly district.

The southern è of beul, neul, and sgeul is changed in Sutherland, not into ia, but into à, so that the words would be written respectively, beàl, nyàl, and sgeal, and are pronounced byàl, nyàl, sgyàl. Cial, brim of a vessel, is also changed into ceàl in Sutherland. Though this resembles in the result the change in Arran of brèagh, cè cream, crè, gèadh, and sè, respectively into breagh (brè or bryà, Mac Alpine), ceà, creà, gèadh, sea (br'è, cya, or à, gya, shè), it is no doubt to be compared rather with the transference in Gaelic generally, of the pronunciation from e to a in such words as gal, ('gyal,') seal, ('shal,') &c.

A substitution of other sounds for è sometimes occurs. Leabag is leòbag ('lyòbag') in N. Inverness, W. Ross, Lewis, and Sutherland; feusag is feòsag (fyòsag) in Sutherland; and reàpach is reòpach in N. Inverness. Teuchaidh viscid, in N. Inverness tiachaidh, is teaochaidh in Creich, and beurla is beaorla in Strathspey, and in parts of Skye and Lewis. The name for the landrail—trèan-ri-trèan—is traon in Lewis and, according to Mac Alpine, in Skye; in Ireland it is traona, [but pronounced treuna, in Uist treona.]

It is not an unknown thing that a word should come to have two pronunciations accompanied by some differentiation in meaning or usage. In N. Argyll, Skye, N. Inverness, W. Ross, and Lewis, séud, when it means jewel, is 'séud,' but when it means hero it is 'siad.' The word is everywhere in those districts familiar in the latter sense. As séud, jewel, it is not at all so frequently used, and may have been adopted from literature. Meud is undiphthongised throughout Sutherland, except in the phrase 'co miad' how much. The phrase is 'co miad' in Skye and Lewis, while the word otherwise is both 'miad' and 'miad' in Lewis, and 'miad-achd' in Skye, and also in N. Argyll. Mac Alpine gives 'meud' and 'miad.' The undiphthongised form of deug is kept in Perth, Strathspey, W. Ross, and Lewis in 'da uair dhéug,' often preceded by the article and compressed 'an da'r'éug' the twelve o'clock; in Sutherland 'an da'r'iaog.' In Irish 'dar-eug' means twelve persons.

Similar diphthongisation is found in Munster in such words as ceud, deug, eun, feuch, feur, and also in words in which it is unknown in Scotland, as breun, eug, treun, and even eudochas eudtrom, light, eugcoir, injustice, eugmhais want, and others. To Scottish Gaels the diphthongisation of eucoir and eugmhais, not to speak of eudochas or aotrom (for eutrom), seems a sheer impossibility, and yet it is found with us in the word easgaidh, i.e. eu-sgith, of exactly similar formation.

fada, faide, a. Long, of great length, the opposite of short. 2 Of long continuance, for a long time. 3* Distant.

[This is the way fad is treated in the other dictionaries, but the different significations of the word in different positions are more clearly explained by grouping the various examples given according to the different meanings of fad, rather than according to its parts of speech, thus.]

(a) Length, longitude—

Fad is leud an taighe, the length and breadth of the house; a' fad am fad, getting longer; air fhad, lengthwise, longitudinally; cuir am f., lengthen; rathad fada, a long way.

(b) Subordinate to Length, longitude—

Air fad an t-saoghail, throughout the world; air fad, altogether, wholly; fìor air fad, just wholly.

(d) Time—

Fad an là, all day long; fad fìnn foinneach an là, throughout the live-long day; fad làithean mo bheatha, throughout my whole life; is fad an là dha-san nach do chuir blas na h-oidhche & 'bheul, long is the day to a hungry man, (lit. to him who hasn't put the taste of the night out of his mouth); is fhad? a dh' fhan thu, you stayed long; cia fhad? how long? I am fad, whilst; 'fhad's a bhithas mi, as long as I am; o chionn fada, long ago; cha tig e gu ceann fada, he will not come for a long while. Baile fada-gu-là, the township of the long night (lit. the long-till-day township.) The reference is to Paible, N. Uist. Long ago a stranger, happening to spend a night in the place, some mischievous lads covered up his bedroom window from the outside, with the result that the night was lengthened by many hours. Several times the astonished stranger was heard to mutter "b'e seo am baile fada-gu-là!" what a long-till-day township!

 feamaid, (DC) s. f. Seaweed—Uist.
 feamainn, feamnach, s. f. Seaweed of all kinds, cast ware, whether growing on the rocks or cast ashore. 2 Rosebay, see seilleanach Frangach—a common name for plants growing near water, especially if long-stalked. [Badge of the MacNeills.] [In Skye, Lewis, &c., the red or tangle seaweed is called bruchd, and the cutting seaweed an feamainn. In Uist the red seaweed is called feamainn dearg, as distinguished from the black seaweed, which they cut on the rocks round the shore, and which is called feamainn dubh. Feamainn is the general name for all kinds of seaweeds, but there are names for the different kinds. F. dearg, or barr dearg, as it is sometimes called, is red seaweed. In Uist the red seaweed, which is cast ashore in May, June and July, and of which kelp was made, is called am bragaire. The cutting seaweed, an feamainn ghearraidh, is known as (a) feamainn dubh, which does not float, it includes aona-chasach and baiteach—(PM); (b) feamainn bhuidhe or bhuidheagach, which floats; (c) gleadhrrach, which also floats; and (d) feamainn chrean or chireag. It is known as feamainn chreanach in Uist, and f. chireag in Skye and Lewis. It is only a few inches in length, and grows only on rocks that are seldom under the water during neap-tides. It has a strong laxative property, often being plucked off the rocks and boiled, when it is given to cattle that are suffering from dryness—JM. In Harris the long seaweed that can be reached when the tide is very low is called lanyadal, in Uist rochd.—(DMC) In Loch Ewe red tangle is called feamainn dearg and barra-stamh.—(DU) All seaweed cast ashore is called when in a heap on beach bruchd, otherwise it is feamainn churra. The very same seaweed if cut from the rock by hand is called feamainn ghearrta.—(DMY)] feannad, s.m. The surface "peat," as opposed to "dubh-thad," the second or lowest "peat." So called from fionn, white, now obsolete here, it not being so black as the under peat from the presence in it of grass roots—Suth'd. 2 (DMC) The turf covering the peat.

feannag, -aige, -an, s.f. † Carrion-crow—corvus corone. 2 Rook. 3 Rig, a ridge of ground generally used for growing potatoes, and sometimes also for raising corn, the seed being laid on the surface and covered with earth dug out of trenches along both sides. The term "lazy-bed" applied to it in English is merely a southern odium on the system of farming in Gaeldom, where soil was scarce, and where bog-land could not be cultivated in any other way. Gheibheadh tu na feannagan-firich, you would find the forest crows—said to persons who boast of doing impracticable things; ars' an seòladair anns a' chrann-aig—"tha e ro mhòr do fheannag, agus ro bheag do fhearrainn," quoth the sailor in the cross-trees—"it is too much for a rig and too little for a lot." This sentence is translated in Campbell's West Highland Tales "it is too big for a crow, and too little for land." A.F. gives a modern application of this saying from personal experience, which makes the meaning clearer, and as he narrowly escaped with his life on the occasion, the words and their application are indelibly fixed in his memory. When out fishing in the Sound of Sleat, in his youth, and overtaken by a storm, an old fisherman who was at the helm told the boys who were rowing to keep a sharp look-out for land, as the evening twilight was fast falling. One of the latter suddenly cried out "Chì mi feannagan A Néill! tha sinn faisg air a' Chill bbig." After taking a deliberate survey (no easy matter in the circumstances), N. replied "Cha'n' eil fhios am an e, 'illean, tha e ro mhòr de dh' fheannag agus ro bheag do dh' fhearran, ach dh' fhaodadh gur e an t-eilean mòr a th' ann," (I don't know, boys, it seems too big for a rig and too small for the land, but perhaps it's the large island)—which it was.

F. an roid, or f. roid, *the autumnal equinox, rood-day; laithean f., holidays, also days of folly; cum an fh. air an là, keep the festival on the right day—very seasonable advice at the present time, when owing to the completion of the 19th. century there is now an additional day between the Old and New Styles, (New Year's Day Old Style now being Jan 14th.) and in some parts of Gaeldom the dates of festivals being still kept according to 19th. century Old Style reckoning, there are three styles in use at present! "Cum an fh. air an là," also signifies pay or keep the engagement on the stipulated day. [Féill does not aspire a proper noun following in Scotland, although it does in Ireland.] Féill Bride, *February—Arran; F. Bealltainn, May—Arran. Eadar Nollaig 's F. roid, eadar F. roid 's F. féin, pers. pron. Self. Used only as an adjunct to nouns or other pronouns. Mi-fhéin, myself; thu-fhéin, thyself; iad-fhéin, themselves.

When combined with a possessive pronoun it may be translated by own, as mo mhac-féin, my own son; síod fhéin e mar iolair, that same is he, like an eagle; mar seo fhéin, in this very way; an seo fhéin, in this very place; an sin féin, then and there; an diugh féin, this very day; 'cheana féin, already; cha'n fhaigh duine an t-uisge féin 'san àite seo gun a cheannach, one cannot get even water here without paying for it; is duine dona gun fheum, a chuireadh cuireadh orm fhéin is caitheamh, he is a pitiful fellow who would invite me and leave me to pay—a strange use of féin.

It is a peculiarity of the Northern dialect of Gaelic that it makes a distinction in the pronunciation of féin when that word is used with the first personal pronoun. Generally it is fhin in that connection, as, mi-fhin, sinn-fhin, orm-fhin—thu fhéin 's mi-fhin. In Suth from Strathly Water to Durness, instead of either fhéin or fhin with the first person, they say fhéin, mi-théan, &c., and in the remainder of Strathly and in the S.E. of the county, they say fhian, mi-fhian, leam-fhian, sinn-fhian, ni mi mo sheunadh fhian, I will charm myself. In other connections the word is fhéin in the North, as it is in all connections in the South.

Gu f., tunefully; filidhean binn nan coilltean, the melodious warblers of the woods. [Miss Eleanor Hull's Textbook of Irish Literature says "The file is to be regarded as in the earliest times combining in his person the functions of magician, lawgiver, judge, counsellor to the chief and poet. Later, but still at a very early time, the offices seem to have been divided, the brehons devoting themselves to the study of law, and the giving of legal decisions, the druids arrogating to themselves the supernatural functions, with the addition, possibly, of some priestly offices, and the fil themselves being regarded henceforth principally as poets and philosophers. This division seems to have already existed in Ireland in the time of St. Patrick, whose preaching brought him into constant opposition with the druids, who were evidently, at that time, regarded as the religious leaders of the nation, though there does not seem to be much sign that they were, as they undoubtedly were, even at an earlier age in Britain and Gaul, sacrificing priests. We have already spoken of the belief in transmigration, as being a part of the early mythology both of Britain and Ireland. It is to be understood that the Irish pagan belief does not exactly correspond with Cæsar's observations regarding the teaching of the druids in Gaul. In the pagan literature of Ireland, we find no trace of a belief in a life after death. The mortals that went into Magh Mell, or the Irish pagan Elysium, did not go there by means of, or after, death; they went as visitors, who could at will return again to earth. The distinction is essential. Until after the introduction of Christian teaching, the idea of a life after death seems to have been non-existent. Both the re-incarnations and the entrance into Magh Mell were made during the continuance of mortal life; they have no reference to a life beyond the grave. Outside the sphere of the ancient mythology, the belief in transmigration is found also to persist; it re-appears in semi-historic times."

Pomponius Mela speaks of the druid doctrine of immortality in Gaul, but says nothing as to the entry of souls into other bodies. He cites as proof, the practice of burning and burying with the dead things appropriate to the needs of the living. He wrote about A.D. 44.

fuilear, s. Too much. Fuilear is used to express necessity, need or obligation, and forms a verb, which is Englished by must, need, or require. Cha'n fuilear dhuibh a bhi cinnteach a sin, you require to be sure of that ; cha mhór nach b' fuilear dhomh e, it was no more than it could be—I, e. I am almost entirely dependent on it ; cha'n fuilear dha pùnd eile, he will require another pound ; cha b' fuilear dhaibh tighinn aig aon uair, they would need to come at one o' clock ; cha'n fuilear dhuit a bhi an seo, you would require to be here ; cha b' fuilear dhuinn cogadh no fáilneachadh, we were obliged to fight or yield ; cha b' fh. uiread eile, as much again is necessary. Cha'n fuilear is rendered affirmatively, and is uilear negatively in English, as, cha'n fh. dha tasdan air as tunnaig, he requires a shilling for the duck; is uilear dha tasdan air an tunnaig, he does not require (so much as) a shilling for the duck; tha thusa mar a bha thu an uiridh, 's ged bhiodh tu na b' fhearr cha b' fhuilear, you are as you were last year, and if you were better, it would be no more than was needed.

g, gort, ivy, the seventh letter of the Gaelic alphabet now in use. When this letter is followed by one or more of the vowels a, o, u, it sounds nearly like g in gap, goose, or rather, it is sounded harder than g, and not so hard as c. G, at the end of a word, if preceded by one or more of the vowels a, o, u, or a liquid, sounds most frequently like k in rook, hook, as, rug, bore; thug, gave; (pron. rook, hook.) Gh, before a, o or u, has an aspirated power, to which there is no correspondent sound in English, but when followed by e or i, it sounds like y in ye, as, gheibh, will get. Gh, at the end of words or syllables is seldom pronounced at all, as, faigh, get; rioghachd, a kingdom. When g, is preceded by i, or followed by e or i, it has a mellow sound, like g in girl, as, gin, produce; géire, sharpness. In conversation g is often elided in agam, agad, againn, agaibh. In Arran, it is elided also in Gilleasbuig, Eanruig, thàinig, Domhnas Cásg (Easter Sunday), and in sealg in là shealg na cùbhaige; is preserved in Sasgunn, though not in Sasunnach; and in some instances it has become t or d after s at the end of a syllable, as uiste (for nisge, water); sothaisdean (for sothaisgean, primrose.)

g, (for ag) prep. At. This prep. when prefixed to infinitives or verbal nouns gives them the force or meaning of the present participle. 'G is used between two vowels, as, tha mi 'g ol, I am (at) drinking; cò seo 'g aom air 'luirg ? who is this bending over his staff? 'though ag might well be written in all such instances in prose. When preceded by a consonant, or followed by a vowel, it is written entire, as, bha 'anam ag éirigh gun thiamh, his soul was rising fearlessly. Ag is sometimes used, even though followed by a consonant, as, gathanna lìomhta ag tearnadh, polished darts descending. Between two consonants the g is often dropped, as Turloach a' caoidh a chloinne, T. bewailing his children.

g', conj. (for gu)

g', prep. (for gu.)

g a, (for aig a) With whom, with which, to whom, to which. 'G am bheil an cridhe briste, who has the broken heart.

g a, (for aig a) At him, at her. 'G a lead-airt, drubbing him; 'g am bheil cinnte air gach nì, who has complete certainty about everything gloine, -an & -achan, s. f. Glass. 2 Drinking

The measure of a drinking-glass. Gloin' uinneig, a pane; cinnidh uisge 'na gh.
crauidh, water shall turn into hard glass; g.
nan druidh, the druids' glass or druids' egg—called in the south of Scotland, adderstanes;
g. uisge-beath, a glass of whisky.

[Gloine-nan-druidh was in high esteem among the Druids. It was one of their distinguishing badges, and was accounted to possess the most extraordinary virtues. There is a passage in Pliny's Natural History, book xix, minutely describing the nature and properties of this amulet. The following is a translation of it. "There is a sort of egg in great repute among the Gauls, of which the Greek writers have made no mention. A vast number of serpents are twisted together in summer, and coiled up in an artificial knot by their saliva and slime; and this is called the serpent's egg. The Druids say that it is tossed in the air with hissings, and must be caught in a cloak before it touches the earth.
The person who thus intercepts it, flies on horseback; for the serpents pursue him until prevented by intervening water. This egg, though bound in gold, will swim against the stream. And as the magi are cunning to conceal their frauds, they give out that this egg must be obtained at a certain age of the moon.

I have seen that egg as large and round as a common-sized apple, in a chequered cartilaginous cover, and worn by the Druids. It is wonderfully extolled for gaining law-suits, and access to kings. It is a badge which is worn with such ostentation, that I knew a Roman knight, a Vocontian, who was slain by the stupid emperor Claudius, merely because he wore it in his breast when a lawsuit was pending." Huddleston's edition of Toland gives some very ingenious conjectures on the subject of this enigmatical Druids' egg. The amulets of glass and stone, which are still preserved and used with implicit faith in many parts of Scottish Gaelic, and are conveyed, for the cure of diseases to a great distance, seem to have their origin in this bauble of ancient priestcraft.—] gradan, -ain, s.m. Expeditious mode of drying grain for the quern by burning the straw. 2 The meal obtained from such grain. 3 Snuff hastily prepared by pounding dry leaves of tobacco in a mortar. 4††Kind of snuff called "Lundifoot." "Gradan was corn or meal prepared after the ancient custom of the Gael. A woman sitting down, took a handful of corn and holding it in her left hand by the stalks, she set fire to the ears, which were at once in a flame. In her right hand she held a stick, with which she dexterously beat the grain out the very instant the husks were quite burnt. By this simple process, corn may be cut down, winnowed, ground, dried and baked within half-an-hour. In separating the meal from the husks, instead of sieves, they made use of a sheepskin stretched on a hoop, minutely perforated by a small hot iron. The bread which is thus made is considered very salubrious, and is extremely pleasant to the palate of the Gael." —* In Uist, where the three processes, eal-achadh, eararadh and gradan, may still be seen practised, the means employed are practically the same as described above. The grain end of the sheaf is put into the flame of the fire; when the chaff and ends of the straw are well alight, the sheaf is held over a clean-swept part of the hearth, or over some vessel, when the grain drops off.—DC.

gu, prep. To, towards. Cuiridh mi litir chugad, I will send a letter to you; chuige is uaithe, to and fro; gu fichead, to twenty. [Governs dative case.] Gu is generally omitted in Argyllshire when speaking of the cardinal points, as tha mi 'faibh an iar, I am going (to the) west; tha mi 'sealltainn deas, I am looking toward the south; but in Skye and the North the gu is generally inserted, as, tha mi dol gu deas, I am going to the south. In Gairloch, Lochalsh & Lochbroom they say 'a' dol gu deas "and "gu tuath," but "a' dol an ear agus an iar (gu pronounced dho.) Gu in these cases is not good idiom; gu implies reaching your destination, but you can never reach the N., S., E. or W. It may be mentioned here, under gu, that a strange effect of the migrations from the south side of the Moray Firth is heard in a common English expression among the people of E. Ross generally where they use such comical phrases as, I am going west to the kitchen, I am going east to the room,—but the place indicated as east is often almost due north. [In certain districts of Perthshire all places are either east or west.] This disappearance of to in English when speaking of the cardinal points is worth noting. At first sight it appears as though the Gaelic idiom of the south had been translated into the English of the north, but the English idiom has really no connection with Gaelic.

Gu is used locally in Suth'd in place of the usual a before infinitives, as, gu arach an anma, to nourish their souls.

G. seilg nan sliabh, to the mountain-chase; g. crich mo shaoghail, to my life's end; air dol gu neo-ni, gone to nothing; gu là brath, for ever; bliadhna gu leth, a year and a half. [Gu here does not mean to, but is a remnant of con, with, and is only found in a few sentences, as, "bliadhna gu leth," "gu Mac 'Io Alasdair 's Lochial."]

When gu comes before an adjective, the adj. is translated into English as an adverb, as, math, good, gu math, well; buileach, effectual, gu buileach, effectually. Armstrong says "Gu has often a similar effect on a substantive, as, beachd, observation, gu beachd, clearly; dearbh, proof, gu dearbh, truly, indeed," but both words are adjectives—"gu beachd" is an Irishism in the Psalms, "beachd" being an adjective in Irish. Chi thu chugad e, 's cha'n fheaird thu agad e, you'll see it coming to you, and you'll be none the better when you have got it.

gu, adv. Till, until.

gu, conj. That, to the end that. Used to signify a wish or idea, and implies that a sentence which is not expressed precedes the clause it introduces. (Tha e fìor) gu'n tugadh cròdh Chaillein dhomh bainn' air an raon, (it is true) that Colin's cattle would give me milk on the plain; (is e mo mhian-sa) gu'n robh mòran maith agad, (it is my wish) that you may have good—a way of returning thanks; (is e mo mhian-sa) gu'm bu slàn a chi mi thu, (it is my wish) that I may see you well I gu ma fada beò an rìgh I long live the king I slàn gu'n robh an Gàidheal gasda, may the gallant Celt be hale. Gu is used in poetry if the nominative precedes the verb, and also to give greater emphasis, as, flannh aiteis aird, gu'n robh 'na ghnèis, an appearance of exceeding joy was in his face; nam bu duine eile gu'n deanadh, bu mhise gu'n dioladh, had another man done it, it's I would avenge it. In negative expressions nach takes the place of gu, O! (is truagh) nach robh mi 'nam chalmán, O! (it is sad) that I were not a dove.—MacKay's Easy G. Syntax.

h, Uath, the hawthorn-tree. The eighth letter of the Gaelic alphabet now in use. It is used in Scottish Gaelic not properly as a letter, for no word commences with it, but simply as a sign of aspiration, in the same way as the dot is used over consonants in Irish Gaelic. When it is prefixed to a word beginning with a vowel, it has the same degree of aspiration as h in hall, hurt—na h-òighean, the maids; na h-oidhche, of the night. It is also required between the negative ní and the following word, if it begin with a vowel—ní h-e, not he; ní h-eadh, no; ní h-iaid, not they; ní h-fheadar, must not.

Before an initial vowel, h is sometimes inserted, and sometimes not, after certain words. In Skye, the tendency is to insert that letter as shown by Mary MacPherson in her book of poems—after prepositions, le h-aiteas, pp. 35, 110; re h-ùine, p. 44; after gur, mur & ge, gura h-e, and gur h-e, that it is, both p. 289; gur h-ise bhios sona, that it is she that will be happy, 91; 's gur h-onair dha ar dùthaich thu, 38; gur h-uallach mo nighean dubh, 307; mur a h-e, 276; ge h-ìomadh, though so many, notwithstanding how many, 37, 49.

I i i, Iogh, yew, the ninth letter of the Gaelic alphabet now in use. I has two sounds—(1) both long and short, long like ee in deem, as, sin, stretch; air, comb; short like ee in feet, (only as feet is pronounced by a Scotsman) as, bith, existence; sir, seek. (2) short and obscure, like i in miss, as, is, am, art, are, in which particular case it does not give the sh sound to s.

is, (AF) s. Ox.

is, conj. And. [† Seemingly an idiomatic use of is, is—consider the idiom, ni e sin is mise an seo, he will do it and I here (lit. he will do it, I am here.) It is usually regarded as an abbreviation of agus, hence the forms a's and 'us. Is, according to Windisch, is not an abbreviation of agus. Et was the word originally (from Latin) brought into use as a monosyllabic copulative for the use of the bards. The old monks wrote it ei, and it gradually slipped into the form i, still retained in printed Irish Gaelic. It is pronounced like English iss. See note under agus.]

is, pres. ind. v. def. & irreg. Thus conjugated: Ind. pres. is mi, I am; is tu, thou art; is e, he is; is i, she is; is sinn, we are; is sibh, you are; is iad, they are.

Ind. past. bu mhi, it was I, bu tu, it was thou; &c. [Also used with a present meaning, see note ¹ below.]

Subj. pres. ma 's mi, if it be I; ma 's tu, if it be thou; &c. Ged is mi, though it is I, &c.

Subj. past. na'm bu mhi, if it were I, &c.

Interr. pres., am mi? is it I?; an tu? is it thou? an e, is it he? &c. Nach mi? is it not I? &c.

Interr. past. am bu¹ mhi, was it I? &c. nach bu¹ mhi? was it not I? &c.

Negative pres. cha mi? it is not I; &c. past. cha bu¹ mhi, it was not I; &c.

It is remarkable that in the pret. interr. and negative, no part of the verb is is seen at all, the conjunctions am, cha, nach, gur, mur, &c. with the pronouns annexed to them, convey the sense as distinctly as if the verb were expressed. Nach e seo an t-each bán? (is) not this the white horse? This omission of the verb to be occurs in the same way in Welsh, as, nid bara a brynwyd, (it was) not bread that was bought.

Is is used in describing the name, profession, identity, state or condition, under which objects definitely exist or did exist.—Is mise Peadar, I am Peter; is tulmo bhráthair, thou art my brother; is caiptean am fear níd, yon fellow is a captain; is iarunn seo, this is iron; bu chlachaí e, he was a mason; bu námhaid e, he was a foe; cha bu robairean iad, they were not robbers. When the subject is pointedly and emphatically expressed or addressed, the verb is is used, as, is tús' an duine, thou art the man. In many cases tha cannot be used in place of is. We cannot say, tha tús' an duine, tha thu mo rún, tha seo umha, &c., we must say, is tús' an duine, is tu mo rún, is umha seo, &c. When an adjective is in the predicate, either bi or is may be used, as tha a' chlach seo mór or is mór a' chlach i seo, this stone is great; tha do cheum mall or is mall do cheum, thy step is slow; but in all such cases when is is used the meaning is more emphatic. Is implies a more permanent state than tha; contrast "is leam e" with "tha e agam"; and "is i is máthair dhomh " with "tha i 'na máthair dhomh."

¹ Bu, is also used with a present meaning, as, cha bu tu mi, 's cha bu mhi 'n cú you are not I and I am no cur—a Celtic way of telling a man he is a bound; cha bu tu bean a' mhairsanta mhéir, you are not as the big merchant's wife—you do not do as she does. Bu, is, of course, an entirely different word to is, but as it is generally treated by grammarians as the past tense of is, examples of its use have been inserted here under that word, to enable readers to find them without difficulty.

Is ann cha'n ann, the fact is that it is not so; is math an airidh, it is well deserved; is math an airidh e, he well deserves it; ma's fíor dhuit e, if it is the truth (as told) to you; e' aít' an t-amb dhuit? where is your abode?; an slán dhuit? are you well; nach e seo an t-each bán? is not this the white horse?; cha bu gheamhna dhuiuin air mórán barrachd, it would not be good enough for us even though much more were offered (lit. for much more); na'm b' fíor sin, or ma b' fíor sin, were it not a sham.

l, luis, the quicken tree. The tenth letter of the Gaelic alphabet now in use. When it is preceded by itself, or by any other consonant, and followed by a, o, or u, it has a broad lingual sound, to which there is none like in the English language; as, làn, full; lòm, bare; lus, a herb. When l is immediately followed by e or i, it is pronounced like the Italian gl in gle or gli; as, litir, a letter; linn, an age. In the case of nouns beginning with l, if the masc. poss. pron. go before, l is pronounced as in English; as, a litir, his letter; which differs essentially in sound from, a litir, her letter. With regard to verbs beginning with l, the preterite is pronounced as in English, and in most other situations it is pronounced as ll. The letter l when aspirated is not followed by h in writing, and the difference between the plain and aspirated sounds is generally only distinguishable to a keen ear, and is almost lost on most people, but when labhair, speak, which is plain, and labhair e, he spoke, which is aspirated, are correctly pronounced, the difference should be easily discernible.

St. Patrick's day is also called “là nan seachd oibrichean fichead,” the day of the twenty-seven works, meaning that twenty-seven different kinds of work are done on a farm on that day. Là sheachnaidh na bliadhna, the day of the week on which 3rd. May falls—on this day the Gael seldom began any work he wished to finish with expedition and success; Nicolson says some apply the name to 2nd. May, and some to 5th. May—he does not say the days of the week on which these days fall, all through the year, which Armstrong's reference to 3rd. May seems to imply.

laír-mhaide(CR) s.f. See-saw—W. of Ross. 2 An laír-mhaide (the wooden mare,) an Uist game, generally played indoors, though sometimes outside also. A trapeze was made by means of two pieces of rope tied to a rafter and let down from the ceiling, with a pole tied to them at a distance of about three feet from the ground. On this pole the player had to balance himself, sitting astride. He held another pole in his hands. The object was to strike the ground on both sides with the pole without falling. Whenever one fell off, in addition to the severe shaking, one was out of the game. This game provided very beneficial exercise.—“Uist games” in Celtic Review, No. 16. Cuiridh mi air an laír-mhaide thu (I will put you on the wooden mare,) is used as a threat in Argyll, referring to the punishment of carrying a person astride on a pole resting on the shoulders of two others.—(AH)

The fear of being left with the last sheaf of the harvest, called the "caill-each" or "gobhar bhacach," always led to an exciting competition among the reapers in the last field. The reaper who came on a leum-ìochd would of course be glad to have so much the less to cut. Rev. Mr. Michie of Dinnet has heard the above saying used in a different sense in the Highlands of Aberdeenshire, viz. that in lands allotted on the run-rig system, the crofter who got a balk attached to his rig was considered luckier than his neighbour with a somewhat larger rig, but without the balk, the grass of which was of more than compensating value.—N.G.P.*

Where fulling-mills are at a distance, the waulking or fulling of cloth is performed by females in the following manner. Six or eight, or sometimes as many as fourteen, take their stations, at equal distances, on each side of a long frame of wattled work, or sometimes of a board ribbed longitudinally, and placed on the ground. Thereon is laid the wetted blanket or cloth which is to undergo the process of waulking. The women then kneel, and with their hands rub it firmly against the frame with all their strength, at the same time singing loudly some spirited melody. When their arms grow tired, they naturally have recourse to their legs; then sitting upon the ground, and tucking their petticoats up to their knees, the cloth is forthwith put under a course of more vigorous friction than before. As the work grows warm the song grows louder and louder. The song is known as óran luadhaidh, and the m, muin, the vine. The eleventh letter of the Gaelic alphabet now in use. When m has its simple sound, it is articulated much the same as in other languages. as, mór, great; caman, a club; lom, bare. When m is aspirated, that is, when it is immediately followed by h, a new combination or letter is formed, somewhat like v in English, as, a mhúineal, his neck; tamb, rest. Dialectally, though never at the beginning of words, mh is often pronounced like a nasal oo, as, rauh, an oar; and sometimes mh is entirely mute in the middle and at the end of words, as, comhnard, level; domb, to me; but nasality generally attaches to the vowel preceding the elision.

'm, cont. for am, art., used after words ending with a vowel. Is tu 'm balaich I you're the boy!

'm, cont. for am, in the. Taobh na creige 'm bláthas na gréine, beside the rock in the warmth of the sun.

'm, cont. for am (ann mo), in my.

'm, cont. for am, Whom. Mu 'm bi iad ag ràdh, about whom they assert.

'm ? cont. for am ? interr. conj. 'M faigh thu sin ? will you get that ?

m, cont. for am, poss. pron. Their. (before labials.) Le 'm beul 's le 'm bìlìbh, with their mouth and with their lips.

m, cont. for mo, poss. pron. My. M' athair, my father; m' anam, my soul.

m, for ma, prep. About.

m 'a, for mu 'a. About his, about her (before vowels.) M' a cheann, about his head; m' a casan, about her feet.

ma, conj. If. Ma 's àill le neach sam bith tigh-iun 'nam dhéidh-sa, if any man will come after me; ma 's o gu'm bi, if so be that it be; ma 's urrainn mi, if I can. [Aspirates the initial consonant of verb following, and is used with the past aff., fut. subj., and pres. and past of bi.]

 Màrt, -airt, s.m. Month of March. 2 Tuesday.

Seed-time

There appears to be considerable confusion in Gaelic proverbs, &c., regarding the first three significations given above for Màrt, as is exemplified in the following notes from Nicol-son's Gaelic Proverbs (NGP), Waifs & Strays (W), and Carmina Gadelica (AC).

In the first-place the old "months" appear to have been moveable, and depended for the time of their commencement upon whether the suitable weather had already arrived. If the weather had not come, neither had the month, e.g. Luath no mall g'an tig am Maigh, thig a' chubhag, late or early as May comes, (i.e. as May-weather comes), so comes the cuckoo. The names of several months, or rather periods, of various lengths occur twice, while Màrt occurs no less than three times.

The comparatively modern Màrt O. S., which is still in vogue in some parts, (says AC in speaking of the months in general) being still used in an O.S. manner, does not commence until the orthodox calendar month is half gone. AC i. 245, ii. 263, & NGP 413, both make Màrt extend into April. Nicol-son appears to have been puzzled, for his explanations are obscure. On p. 26 (NGP) he translates "an ciad Mhàrt," as the first Tuesday, while from a note explaining the same proverb, it is evident that he thought Màrt stood for March.

The first Tuesday of the sowing-time or times, would appear to be "An ciad Mhàrt de Mhàrt-na-curachd," in the same way as was there a Bealltuinn of the Bealltuinn and a Liùnasdal of Liùnasdal. AC gives "gaoth gheur nam Màrt" (pl.) NGP p. 26 speaks of three Màrts. W. iii. 218, 298, 299 speaks of three—Apl. 12 to May 1, Aug. 12, Sept. 12—
 (This triple occurrence of 12 is noteworthy.)

NGP says 1st. week of April is too soon to sow, so he would appear to prefer the 2nd. or 3rd. week. Is fhearr an sneachda na 'bhi gun sian, an dèidh an siol a chur 'san talamh, better snow than no rain-storm, when the seed is in the ground, (p. 251) shows that sowing were better done when snow is out of season, i.e. late in April. AC says seed is winnowed by "gaoth gheur nam Màrt," before being sown, therefore the Màrt or Màrts must be nearly over, i.e. late in April, before the seed is in the ground. W. gives Apl. 12 to May 1, i.e. late in April. Another proverb, (NGP. 24) Am fear a thig a mach 'sa Mhàrt, théid e staigh 'sa Ghiblean, the grass that comes out in March shrinks away in April, implies that seed should not appear till Màrt be over, or else it will be killed by the weather.

On the other hand, NGP gives Is fhearr aon oidhche Mhàirt na trì là Foghair (for growth), so the seed, to judge by this, ought to be coming up in March, or else that sowing ought to be done earlier. [It is most likely that it is not growth which is referred to in this proverb, as Nicolson supposes, but the winnowing referred to by AC.] NGP says Tuesday for sowing, AC prefers Friday. There was also the "flor," or suitable Màrt.

 played in harvest-time round the hay- and corn-stacks, the passages among which give splendid opportunities of hiding. When the signal is given, the chaser comes round the stacks after the other players, and as each one is found, he is out of the game till they are all discovered, when the first to be caught is made hunter for the next round.
 The signal for this game to begin is the shout of "Mhalach nan cruach." This is a combination of "hide and seek and "tig" for the players hide round the stacks, but it is not enough for the searcher to see them, as in "hide and seek," he must touch them. as in "tig." On the other hand, those caught are out of the game till all are caught, when the first caught becomes the chaser—Uist muileannachd, s.f. Occupation of a miller. 2 Grinding.

muileann-brà, s.m. Quern. (for illustrations and names of parts see brà.) The quern was formerly the only mill for corn-grinding used in the Gàidhealtachd. It is still in use in many parts of northern Europe and in Asia, and the "two women grinding at the mill" (quern) may be seen to-day in Nazareth exactly as they were in the days of Christ. The implement consists of two stones, the lower being about two feet in diameter, and commonly hollowed to the depth of about six inches. This hollow is of equal depth and diameter. Within this is placed horizontally, a smooth round flag about four inches thick, and so fitted to the cavity that it can just revolve with ease. Through the centre of this revolving flag there is bored a hole for conveying the grain. In the lower stone, in the centre of its cavity, there is fixed a wooden pin on which the upper stone is placed in such exact equiponderance, that, though there be some friction from their contact, a little force applied will make the upper stone revolve for several times, when there is no grain underneath. On the surface of the upper stone, and near the edge, are two or three holes, just deep enough to hold in its place the stick by which it is turned round. The working of the quern is left to the women, two of whom, when the grain is properly dried, sit squatting on the ground, with the quern between them and singing loudly an appropriate song, perform their work, one turning round the stone with the handle placed in one of the holes, and the other dropping the corn in through the large hole. The law of Scotland attempted in vain to discourage the use of the quern. In the year 1248 it was enacted "that no man shall presume to grind quheit, mais-loch or rye, with hand mylnes, except he be compelled by storm, and be in lack of mylnes quhilk should grind the samen; and in this case, if a man grinds at hand-mylnes, he shall give the thretein measure as multer; and gif any man contraveins this our prohibition, he shall tyne his hand-mylnes perpetuallie." muileann-uisge, s.m. Water-mill.

n, nuin, the ash-tree ; the twelfth letter of the Gaelic alphabet at present in use. N, when immediately preceded by i, sounds like n in English win ; nn, when immediately preceded by i, sounds like gn in French guigne, or ng in English sing. When preceded and followed by broad vowels, nn has a particularly deep and broad sound, which has no equivalent in English. The monosyllable an, when the next word begins with c or g, sounds like ang, as, an cu, the dog. The letter n when aspirated is not followed by h in writing, and a distinction between the plain and aspirated sounds is not generally made in Northern Gaelic, although there is an appreciable difference between the n in, nigh do chasan, wash your feet, which is plain, and that in, nigh e a chasan, he washed his feet, which is aspirated, when they are correctly pronounced.

The following note is from D.C.

The system of land measure which prevailed in the Western Isles and then took root in Argyllshire, was neither Pictish nor Irish, but Norse. The unit was the "ounce" land, i.e. the extent of land which paid the rent of an ounce of silver. The word was borrowed by Gaelic, and appears as unna. The land term was unna (e.g. Uganab in North Uist and in Tiree). It appears in old charters as, zeroung, teiroung, &c. This extent was divided into 90 parts—sometimes into only 18—such parts being called peighinn; hence many place-names (e.g. Pennymore, Peighinnchornach, &c.) In some places the pennyland was subdivided. On Lochyneside we meet with Lephinmore. Lephincorrach, (the big half pennyland, and the rough half pennyland); also an Fheidirhng, (the farthingland.) A conventional use of the term peighinn is met with in Skye—thecrofting township of Elgol is separated by a march dyke from the deer-forest; each crofter is responsible for the upkeep of a specified length of the dyke, and it is called the peighinn of hiscroft; similarly the part of the shore allotted to each crofter for seaware is called the peighinn of thatcroft. The full fractional division of land was carried out in Islay thus:—

—Tirunga	—13s. 4d. Scots
= Leth-peighinn.	= 6s. 8d.
= { Ceathramh,	= 3s. 4d.
= { quarterland,	= 1s. 8d.
= Ochdamb.	= 8s. 4d.
= Leothbras	= 4s. 2d.
= { Obta bán or	= 9s. 1d.
= { great land.
= } a sgiltinn.

Lands in Islay were valued in 1541 in quarters, half quarters and eighths; in 1562 these began to be given as equivalents of multiples and fractions of 10 marks, which sum was taken as amounting in value to an ounce of silver.

13 Boun an fheadain, sole of chanter.

The bagpipes are spoken of in Gaelic in the singular—a' phioib.

The use of the bagpipe can be traced to the most remote antiquity, although it seems, if not comparatively modern in connection with the Highlands, at least to have held a second place in comparison with the harp in the estimation of the bulk of the people, until during the last few centuries. The Greek word sumphōnia, which appears as an Aramic loan-word in Daniel, iii, 5, is translated "bagpipe" by every competent translator. There is no doubt that the verse relating the arrival of the prodigal son's brother in the New Testament, should be rendered "now his elder son was in the field, and as he came and drew nigh to the house, he heard bagpipes and dancing."—Expository Times, Jan. 1905.
